

NORTHWESTERN
UNIVERSITY

August 19, 2015

American Economic Review
2014 Broadway, Suite 305
Nashville, TN 37203

Northwestern University
Department of Economics
2001 Sheridan Road
Evanston, IL 60208

Re: AER Submission: "The Effect of Wealth on Individual and Household Labor Supply: Evidence from Swedish Lotteries"

To whom it may concern:

I provide specific answers to the five specific numbered questions contained in the American Economic Association disclosure document (http://www.aeaweb.org/aea_journals/AEA_Disclosure_Policy.pdf).

1. We received financial support from several organizations, as described in acknowledgements of the paper. These grants were used to prepare the data set, travel to Sweden to work with the data, and pay summer salaries and research assistants. All of these organizations have supported social science research in the past.
2. I have not received any financial support in the past three years from a party that would have a financial, ideological, or political stake in the paper referenced above.
3. I am not an officer, director, or board member in a profit or non-profit organization that has a relevant relationship to the contents of the article referenced above.
4. None of my close relatives have received any financial support for my work on the paper referenced above. None of my close relatives have received any financial support in the past three years from a party that would have a financial, ideological, or political stake in the paper referenced above. None of my close relatives are an officer, director, or board member in a profit or non-profit organization that has a relevant relationship to the contents of the article referenced above.
5. No party had the right to review the contents of the paper prior to circulation.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in cursive script that reads "Matthew J. Notowidigdo".

Matthew J. Notowidigdo
Associate Professor of Economics
Northwestern University