Product Variety, the Cost of Living and Welfare Across Countries

I received financial support from Harvard Business School and the National Science Foundation under a Digging into Data grant of the Trans-Atlantic Platform (NSF Award #1724649) for the paper “Product Variety, the Cost of Living and Welfare Across Countries”.

I am a co-founder and have an ownership stake in PriceStats LLC, a private company that uses scraped online retail data to compute inflation indices. Access to PriceStats' proprietary data were used in this paper to compute product barcode counts. It was provided without any conditions to review the findings before publication. There are no other interested parties from whom I have received financial support, and I have no position with any relevant organization. No human subjects were involved in this research.
